No matter how "industry-ready" its bundled tethered RAW converter becomes, it will still be very far behind both Lightroom and Adobe's availability of an external plug-in-based RAW converter. If I were in firmware's shoes, I would prefer to change the world with a new camera. It's also a good strategy because it makes upgrading faster for the manufacturers. However, I don't think that's what we're looking at here. What we have hit is however, that Olympus has not been having an excellent time of things lately.
